That was fine by 1985 standards, but a modern engine with the same displacement will crank out twice as much. I should mention that if you're looking for a used car, the condition of the engine matters more than the engine type. I'm not sure how I did it, but I managed to kill the 22RE in my all time favorite pickup.

The 22re is a good engine if you keep it close to stock. It's when you try and make power the reliability goes out the window. IMO they are costly to build for the power and reliability you get. I just sold my 22rte (22re turbo) engine after destroying the third head and ice cam. That will be the last 22re I build for myself.
